Culture of Health Prize

2016 RWJF CULTURE OF HEALTH PRIZE
Frequently Asked Questions

TABLE OF CONTENTS

General Prize FAQs ................................................................................. 4

How many Prizes will be given? ................................................................. 4
What are the 2015 winning communities? ................................................ 4
Is my community eligible to apply? ............................................................ 4
Are neighborhoods eligible to apply? ......................................................... 4
Are community boards representing community districts eligible to apply? .... 4
Are communities within U.S. territories eligible to apply? ......................... 5
What is a Native Hawaiian organization? .................................................... 5
How is the RWJF Culture of Health Prize different from a grant? ............... 5
Who should submit the application? ......................................................... 5
What are the responsibilities of the primary and alternate contacts? .......... 5
Can any eligible community win? .............................................................. 5
What is the connection between the Prize and the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps? .................... 6
Will applicant communities be judged according to their County Health Rankings? ........... 6
What is the connection between the Prize and Robert Wood Johnson Foundation’s grantmaking program? ........................................................................ 6
Our community participated in a previous year’s competition but did not win and was not a finalist. May we reapply? ................................................................. 6
What are the past Prize finalist communities? .......................................... 6
How will applications be evaluated? .......................................................... 7
How will winners be selected? ................................................................. 7
What is the process for selecting the winners? ......................................... 7
Who are the national health experts that are involved in the Prize selection process? ........... 7
May we submit letters of support on behalf of our application? ................................................................. 9
If my community wins, who gets the money? ................................................................................................. 9
What is expected of communities who win the RWJF Culture of Health Prize? ........................................ 9
Are you aiming for geographic diversity, or is it possible for multiple communities from one state to win? ................................................................................................................................................. 9
My community may not be quite ready to submit this year. How much do the criteria and selection process change from year to year? Could we use the criteria as guideposts for our readiness? .......... 9
We are interested in improving our application. Is there a way to find out why our community did not win last year? ......................................................................................................................................................... 10
How many applications were received for the last round? ........................................................................ 10
Is there a minimum or maximum population size? ....................................................................................... 10
Will there be a Call for Applications for the RWJF Culture of Health Prize released in 2017? .......... 10
What if a community submits more than one application? ........................................................................ 10
Whom may I contact for more information? .............................................................................................. 10

Phase I FAQs .................................................................................................................................................. 11
Do we need accomplishments in all four factor areas in order to apply? ................................................. 11
We are having a hard time deciding on just four accomplishments to feature. What do you suggest? ................................................................................................................................................................. 11
What are policy, environmental, and systems changes as described in the second Prize criterion? .11
What if our community hasn’t yet undertaken work in the area of policy, environmental, or systems change? .................................................................................................................................................. 11
What type of data should a community be ready to submit with their application? ............................................... 11
Our community uses a collective impact approach. How should we represent this in our Prize application? ......................................................................................................................................................... 12
Our community has met the standards in all of the focus areas of Blue Zones; may we draw upon those successes for our application? ....................................................................................................................... 12
How are applicants notified if they are advancing to Phase II? ............................................................... 12
Communities benefit from many different types of partnerships, including those with organizations located outside their geopolitical boundaries. May we consider such partnerships for our Phase I Essay? ........................................................................................................................................... 12
Do judges give preference to applications that emphasize well-established policies, programs, or strategies? .......................................................................................................................................................... 12
Are Prize criteria ranked in order of importance? .......................................................................................... 12

Phase II FAQs ................................................................................................................................................ 13
What will be required as part of the Phase II Application? ....................................................................... 13
Should the Phase II essay include a statement of how we intend to use the Prize money should we win? ................................................................................................................................................................. 13
Is a multimedia presentation required of applicants? .................................................................13
Could you recommend a quick, easy, and inexpensive way to create a multimedia presentation? 13
How long should the multimedia presentation be? .................................................................13
The videos featuring the winning communities on the RWJF website are very well done. Are these videos submitted by communities as part of their applications or are they produced for the announcement of winners? ........................................................................................................14
Should the multimedia presentation focus on the four accomplishments from the Phase I application or should we think more broadly? ........................................................................................14
Would it be acceptable to include interviews with elected officials or other decision-makers in the multimedia presentation? ..................................................................................................................14
Are past Prize winners available to provide advice or guidance to future applicants? ..............14
May the primary or alternate contact organizations serve as the Prize recipient and receive the $25,000 award should the community win? ..................................................................................14

Finalist & Site Visit FAQs .................................................................................................15

When will the site visits take place? .......................................................................................15
How will site visits be scheduled? ..........................................................................................15
How long will site visits last? ...................................................................................................15
How many site visitors will participate? ..................................................................................15
What happens during a site visit? ...........................................................................................15
Who organizes the site visit? .................................................................................................16
Who pays for the site visit? ....................................................................................................16
May finalist communities offer gifts to site visitors? ..............................................................16
How will we be notified if we have won the Prize? .................................................................16
What happens if we win? ........................................................................................................16
When may we share the good news with our community? .....................................................16
May we have a local celebration? ..........................................................................................17
What happens after the celebrations? .....................................................................................17
If a community is chosen as a winner, is it guaranteed to be awarded a Prize? .......................17
General Prize FAQs

How many Prizes will be given?
Up to ten $25,000 Prizes will be awarded. Each applicant community will designate a local U.S. governmental entity or tax exempt public charity operating in its community to accept the Prize funds on the community’s behalf, should they win.

What are the 2015 winning communities?
The eight 2015 Prize-winning communities are:

• Bridgeport, Connecticut
• Bronx, New York
• Everett, Massachusetts
• Kansas City, Missouri
• Lawrence, Massachusetts
• Menominee Nation, Wisconsin
• Spartanburg County, South Carolina
• Waaswaaganing Anishinaabeg (Lac du Flambeau Tribe), Wisconsin

Is my community eligible to apply?
The RWJF Culture of Health Prize honors whole U.S. communities. Applicant communities can be any of the following:

• Town, village, borough, and other local incorporated places
• City
• County or parish
• Federally-recognized tribe
• Native Hawaiian organization serving and representing the interests of Native Hawaiians in Hawaii
• Region (such as contiguous towns, cities, or counties)

Submissions representing the work of a single organization or initiative will not be considered. Neighborhoods, states and unincorporated local communities are not eligible to apply.

Are neighborhoods eligible to apply?
While neighborhoods may not apply on their own, the work of neighborhoods absolutely can be featured as part of the broader efforts being undertaken in towns and cities.

Are community boards representing community districts eligible to apply?
Community boards with appointed members acting in an advisory capacity and wielding no official authority to make or enforce laws may not apply on their own; however, the work of the district they represent can be featured as part of the broader efforts being undertaken in towns and cities.
Are communities within U.S. territories eligible to apply?
Yes. Communities within the territories administered by the United States are welcome to apply including, but not limited to, American Samoa, Federated States of Micronesia, Guam, Marshall Islands, Northern Mariana Islands, Palau, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

What is a Native Hawaiian organization?
"Native Hawaiian" means any individual who is a descendant of the aboriginal people who, prior to 1778, occupied and exercised sovereignty in the area that now constitutes the State of Hawaii. Native Hawaiian organization “means any organization which (A) serves and represents the interests of Native Hawaiians; (B) has as a primary and stated purpose the provision of services to Native Hawaiians; and (C) has demonstrated expertise in aspects of historic preservation that are culturally significant to Native Hawaiians.” See, e.g., U.S. Code.

How is the RWJF Culture of Health Prize different from a grant?
The Prize celebrates communities’ successes – what they already have achieved – whereas grants provide dollars to help communities move forward, often to meet specific goals and objectives. The Prize is a cash award and community partners can decide together how to use the funds to benefit the community; budget reports to the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation (RWJF) or the University of Wisconsin Population Health Institute (UWPHI) on Prize expenditures are not required.

Who should submit the application?
The application should reflect the work of the community as a whole, not just one organization. Community members should select two people, who may or may not be from the same organization, to serve as primary and alternate contacts on the application.

What are the responsibilities of the primary and alternate contacts?
The primary and alternate contacts will receive all communications about a community’s Prize application. These communications include, but are not limited to, notifications about whether a community has been selected to advance from Phase I to Phase II of the selection process, and if selected for Phase II, whether a community has been selected as a finalist and invited to receive a site visit. The primary contact often serves as the local contact person for site visits; however, this can be delegated to another person or organization.

Can any eligible community win?
Yes. The Prize will be awarded to eligible communities that are each on their own unique journey toward better health. Every community can participate in the process of becoming healthier. Judges will evaluate each applicant individually, considering demonstrated progress relative to the Prize criteria in light of each community’s unique challenges, opportunities and resources.
What is the connection between the Prize and the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps?

The RWJF Culture of Health Prize was originally conceived as part of the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps program (www.countyhealthrankings.org), a collaboration between RWJF and the University of Wisconsin Population Health Institute (UWPHI). Based on a model of population health improvement, the County Health Rankings help communities see where they are doing well and where there are opportunities to improve across many factors that influence health – including health behaviors, clinical care, social and economic factors, and the physical environment. The County Health Rankings & Roadmaps are a call to action – designed to motivate and equip community leaders to work together to build a Culture of Health. Recognizing that every community is on a unique journey toward better health and that success stories are as diverse as our nation’s populations, the RWJF Culture of Health Prize was established to shine a light on communities who had answered the call to action and were on the leading edge of building a Culture of Health.

Will applicant communities be judged according to their County Health Rankings?

The Prize and its selection criteria are based on the same model of population health improvement that underpins the County Health Rankings. Selection criteria for the Prize are completely independent of health outcomes and health factor rankings. Communities will be judged on their accomplishments – not whether they are ranked first or last in the County Health Rankings.

What is the connection between the Prize and Robert Wood Johnson Foundation’s grantmaking program?

The Prize is open to all communities, including those who have and have not previously received grants from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Communities will be judged on what they have accomplished relative to available resources, regardless of the funding source.

Our community participated in a previous year’s competition but did not win and was not a finalist. May we reapply?

Yes. With the exception of all Prize winners and finalists from the previous year’s competition, all past applicants are eligible and encouraged to reapply. Finalist communities (those that received a site visit, but did not win the Prize) are asked to sit out at least one round of the competition before reapplying. Past finalists that reapply when eligible and advance to Phase II of the competition will be asked to incorporate and emphasize how new and continued efforts and accomplishments demonstrate tangible progress toward building a Culture of Health across all six Prize criteria since their Prize submission and site visit.

What are the past Prize finalist communities?

Past finalists include:

- Bexar County, TX
- Canton, OH
- East Baton Rouge Parish, LA
- El Paso County, TX
- Franklin County, ME
- Indianola, MS
- Marin City, CA
- Quad Cities Region, IA/IL
How will applications be evaluated?

The Prize criteria (see Call for Applications pp. 4-5) will drive the judging throughout the selection process, from Phase I through the site visits. Judges will not only review each criterion individually, but will also consider how the community creates momentum towards positive and lasting change with an eye towards how the community has demonstrated creativity and determination in addressing a wide range of health priorities. Finally, judges will seek to elevate communities having compelling and inspirational stories — and people to tell these stories — with the goal of inspiring a nation of communities building a Culture of Health.

How will winners be selected?

Communities will advance from Phase I to Phase II based on how well their four accomplishments illustrate the six Prize criteria with a particular emphasis on the first three criteria: (1) defining health in the broadest possible terms, (2) committing to sustainable systems changes and policy-oriented long-term solutions, and (3) cultivating a shared and deeply-held belief in the importance of equal opportunity for health. Advancing from Phase II to finalist status will also be based on a review of the application materials (written materials and multimedia presentation) according to how well the community as a whole has embraced all six Prize criteria. Winners will be selected based on a combination of Phase I and II materials and how compelling, inspiring and real those materials become during the face-to-face site visit. During the site visit, communities may also feature accomplishments and information beyond what was included in the written application that supports how they are improving health in their community.

What is the process for selecting the winners?

Phase I and Phase II applications will be evaluated by a panel of judges that include staff from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps program at the University of Wisconsin and a national panel of community health experts. This process will determine the communities selected for a site visit. Site visitors will include also include staff from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps program at the University of Wisconsin and national community health experts. Site visitors will score each community visited based on the Prize criteria. The final slate of winning communities will be approved by RWJF.

Who are the national health experts that are involved in the Prize selection process?

Current Prize Advisory Group members include:

- John Auerbach, MBA, Senior Policy Advisor to the Director/Acting Director of the Office of State, Tribal, and Local Territorial Support, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention
- Antony Chiang, JD, President, Empire Health Foundation
• Colby Dailey, MA, Managing Director, Build Healthy Places Network
• Kristin Giantris, MPA, Vice President, Nonprofit Finance Fund
• Maeghan Gilmore, MPH, Program Director – County Solutions & Innovation, National Association of Counties
• Phillip González, MA, Program Director, Community Catalyst
• Ben Hecht, JD, President / CEO, Living Cities
• Necole S. Irvin, JD, MPH, Principal, Blackwood Advisors
• Letetia Daniels Jackson, BBA, President / CEO, Tandeka, LLC
• Khanh Nguyen, JD, Portfolio Director, Healthy Living, The Colorado Health Foundation
• Mary Pittman, DrPH, President / CEO, Public Health Institute
• Lillian Rivera, RN, MSN, PhD, Administrator, Florida Department of Health in Miami-Dade County
• Eduardo Sanchez, MD, MPH, Deputy Chief Medical Officer, American Heart Association
• Marion Standish, JD, Director of Community Health, The California Endowment
• Elizabeth M. Walker Romero, MS, Senior Director, Association of State and Territorial Health Officials
• Tracy Wiedt, MPH, Strategic Director for Healthy Communities, American Cancer Society

National experts (and their affiliation at the time) involved in the past include:

• David G. Altman, PhD, Executive Vice President, Research, Innovation, and Product Development, Center for Creative Leadership
• Catherine M. Baase, MD, Global Director Health Services, The Dow Chemical Company
• Georges C. Benjamin, MD, FACP, FACEP(E), Executive Director, American Public Health Association
• Kitty Hsu Dana, MBA, Vice President, Community Impact, Health, United Way Worldwide
• Ginny Ehrlich, MPH, D Ed, Former CEO, Clinton Health Matters Initiative, Clinton Foundation
• Lori Freeman, MBA, Chief Executive Officer, Association of Maternal Child Health Programs
• Lavastian Glenn, BA, Program Officer, Mary Reynolds Babcock Foundation
• Patricia Nez Henderson, MD, Program Director, Black Hills Center for American Indian Health
• Chris Kabel, MPH, Senior Program Officer, The Kresge Foundation
• Mary Kramer, MA, Former Iowa State Senator and Former U.S. Ambassador to Barbados
• Sanne Magnan, MD, PhD, President and CEO, Institute for Clinical Systems Improvement
• Judith Monroe, MD, Director of the Office for State, Tribal, Local, and Territorial Support, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention
• Marcie Parkhurst, MCP, Associate Director, FSG
• Susan Patterson, BA, Program Director/Charlotte, NC, Knight Foundation
• Yanique Redwood, PhD, MPH, President / CEO, Consumer Health Foundation
• Tim Size, MBA, Executive Director, Rural Wisconsin Health Cooperative
• Brian Smedley, PhD, Vice President and Director, Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies
• David Stone, PhD, Associate Professor of Public Health, Northern Illinois University
• Sarah Strunk, MHA, Executive Director, Active Living by Design
• Kathy Sykes, MA, Senior Advisor, Aging Initiative, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency
• Julie Trocchio, RN, BSN, MS, Senior Director, Community Benefit and Continuing Care Catholic Health Association
May we submit letters of support on behalf of our application?

No supplementary materials, including letters of support, will be accepted, but we strongly encourage you to highlight your partners and supporters in your multimedia presentation and/or site visit should you advance in the Prize selection process.

If my community wins, who gets the money?

During Phase II, each applicant community will be required to designate a local U.S. governmental entity or tax exempt public charity operating in its community to accept the $25,000 Prize on the community’s behalf, should they win. To be eligible, the recommended Prize recipient must be a local U.S. governmental entity, including, but not limited to, state universities, or a tax exempt entity under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code (the "Code") and classified as other than a private foundation or Type III supporting organization under section 509 of the Code. Community partners can decide together how to use the funds to benefit the community; budget reports to RWJF or UWPHI on Prize expenditures are not required.

What is expected of communities who win the RWJF Culture of Health Prize?

Based on their demonstrated capacity for and dedication to creating lasting change, representatives from winning communities will be expected to serve as ambassadors for building a Culture of Health across America – sharing their successes, learning from others, and networking locally, regionally, and nationally. This may be accomplished via interviews with print, radio, electronic or television media; presentations at regional, state or national conferences; invitations to present on national webinars; opportunities to serve on national advisory groups; and other avenues to be determined. Winners will work closely with RWJF communications and UWPHI to prepare for these events.

Are you aiming for geographic diversity, or is it possible for multiple communities from one state to win?

Our primary goal is to recognize communities that are working on the forefront of health improvement to build a Culture of Health as exemplified by the six Prize criteria.

My community may not be quite ready to submit this year. How much do the criteria and selection process change from year to year? Could we use the criteria as guideposts for our readiness?

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation has an enduring commitment to the RWJF Culture of Health Prize. The Prize criteria are at the core of the program and are not expected to change substantially going forward. With this in mind, communities are encouraged to use the criteria as a general resource for health improvement action as well as a tool for gauging readiness for applying for the Prize. Community leaders may find the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps Poised for Progress tool helpful to conduct this type of assessment.
We are interested in improving our application. Is there a way to find out why our community did not win last year?

Due to the large volume of applications received, the program is unable to provide feedback to all communities about their past applications. Applicants that advance to Phase II and are not selected as finalists receive written feedback about how their application did or did not reflect the six Prize criteria. Communities may also conduct a self-assessment of their application using the six Prize criteria found in the Call for Applications and the County Health Rankings & Roadmaps Poised for Progress tool. Additional tools that can assist your community with advancing your work to improve health include the Roadmaps to Health Action Center and What Works for Health.

How many applications were received for the last round?

For the 2016 competition, 188 applications were received.

Is there a minimum or maximum population size?

No. The program invites applications from all communities that meet the eligibility requirements regardless of population size.

Will there be a Call for Applications for the RWJF Culture of Health Prize released in 2017?

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation plans to issue a Call for Applications for the Prize in 2017.

What if a community submits more than one application?

Collaboration within communities is strongly encouraged and judges will look favorably on applicants that have done the legwork to bring diverse organizations and partnerships together for a single Phase I submission. In the event there are multiple applications from one community and/or overlapping jurisdictions, each application will be reviewed independently. If two or more applications from the same community are advanced to Phase II, applicants will be encouraged to work together to submit one Phase II application on behalf of the whole community.

Whom may I contact for more information?

For more information on the RWJF Culture of Health Prize, please contact: Carrie Carroll, Deputy Director, RWJF Culture of Health Prize, email: prize@match.wisc.edu.
Phase I FAQs

Do we need accomplishments in all four factor areas in order to apply?

There is not a specific requirement for one accomplishment per health factor; however, applicants are encouraged to elevate accomplishments that best exemplify the Prize criteria and as such are strongly encouraged to consider how work across their community reflects a balanced portfolio across the multiple determinants of health as reflected in the County Health Rankings model. While policies, programs, and strategies that support healthy eating, physical activity, and other health behaviors are important, they are only one piece of the puzzle. Standing alone, these will not result in a competitive application. Because of their strong influence on health outcomes, judges have particular interest in accomplishments targeting action to improve the social and economic factors. Applicants will be asked to describe how the community is working in all four health factor areas as show in the County Health Rankings model as part of the Phase II submission.

We are having a hard time deciding on just four accomplishments to feature. What do you suggest?

There is no best way to determine which accomplishments to feature on your application, but we encourage community members to collaborate on these decisions and keep the Prize criteria in mind during your deliberations. Communities that move to Phase II will have the opportunity to showcase additional accomplishments.

What are policy, environmental, and systems changes as described in the second Prize criterion?

In general, these types of changes represents a shift from thinking about improving individual health to thinking about how to improve health at a population level by making healthy choices the easy choices. Policy change includes the passing of laws, ordinances, resolutions, mandates, regulations, or rules; system change involves change made to the rules or processes within an organization or the rules or processes that guide how different organizations work together; and environmental change is a change made to the physical environment. Policy change can also enable successful programs to be replicated and/or funded. These changes may target many different kinds and sizes of populations. For example, policy changes in education could affect students and their families in one school, a whole school district, a county, or a state.

What if our community hasn’t yet undertaken work in the area of policy, environmental, or systems change?

This work is difficult – but it’s crucial for improving population health. Communities that have not yet done this type of work may not yet be competitive for the Prize, but we encourage you to explore the wide variety of resources available to communities in this area, including the Roadmaps to Health Action Center and What Works for Health.

What type of data should a community be ready to submit with their application?

In your Phase I application essay, we encourage communities to include qualitative and quantitative process measures, outcome data, and stories of success that you are most proud of and that best demonstrate how your community’s efforts align with the Prize criteria. We are not seeking reports or studies in the Phase I application. As an applicant community is invited to advance in the Prize competition from Phase I to Phase II and the Site Visit there are increasing opportunities to share data with the judges.

Our community uses a collective impact approach. How should we represent this in our Prize application?

One or more of your collective impact accomplishments could be featured in the four accomplishments required in the Phase I application for the Prize. The five key elements of collective impact are also woven into the six Prize criteria, so use your successes in collective impact to tell us how you have done your work. For example, shared measurement systems in collective impact can be an integral part of Prize Criteria #6—Measuring and sharing progress and results.

Our community has met the standards in all of the focus areas of Blue Zones; may we draw upon those successes for our application?

There is much alignment between the RWJF Culture of Health Prize and Blue Zones. Applicants should build on past successes and recognition they have received, and customize the RWJF Culture of Health Prize application essay by specifically addressing the Prize criteria.

How are applicants notified if they are advancing to Phase II?

All applicants will be notified by email. Those advancing to Phase II will receive an invitation with detailed instructions about requirements and deadlines for the next stage of the process.

Communities benefit from many different types of partnerships, including those with organizations located outside their geopolitical boundaries. May we consider such partnerships for our Phase I Essay?

Yes. Community applicants are encouraged to illustrate the depth and breadth of partnerships within and beyond their communities. Please keep in mind, however, that judges seek to honor communities that are driving the process from within. Communities should be able to demonstrate an internal force and passion for health improvement that is independent of external contributions.

Do judges give preference to applications that emphasize well-established policies, programs, or strategies?

Not necessarily. Applicant communities are encouraged to consider both newly implemented and well-established accomplishments in selecting four that best exemplify the Prize criteria overall.

Are Prize criteria ranked in order of importance?

The six Prize criteria together drive the RWJF Culture of Health Prize competition from beginning to end; all play a vital role in selection of winners. That said, special consideration is given to the first three criteria throughout all stages of the review process: (1) defining health in the broadest possible terms; (2) committing to sustainable systems changes and policy-oriented long-term solutions; and (3) cultivating a shared and deeply-held belief in the importance of equal opportunity for health.

Phase II FAQs

What will be required as part of the Phase II Application?

For Phase II, invited community applicants will:

- Submit a second brief essay to provide judges with additional information about community health improvement efforts, with a focus on what they have done and how they have done it, including how the community is working in all four health factor areas as show in the County Health Rankings model.
- Prepare a brief four-minute multimedia presentation that brings their community to life.
- Draft a site visit itinerary to give judges a sense of what they might see and who they might meet should their community be selected as a finalist.
- Designate a local governmental entity or tax exempt public charity within the community to accept the $25,000 Prize on the community’s behalf, should their community win.

Should the Phase II essay include a statement of how we intend to use the Prize money should we win?

No. The RWJF Culture of Health Prize offers a cash Prize of $25,000 to each winning community. There is no need or expectation for applicant communities to state their intentions anywhere in application materials.

Is a multimedia presentation required of applicants?

Yes, but only for those communities who are selected to advance to Phase II of the selection process. The multimedia presentation is intended to supplement the paper application by giving judges a glimpse into important visual aspects of your community as well as an opportunity to hear directly from community members. The presentation may include photographs and/or video, and may be accompanied by music and/or narration. We encourage you to use this opportunity to bring your community to life for judges; for example, you may wish to include scenes from community events or interviews with community members and leaders.

Could you recommend a quick, easy, and inexpensive way to create a multimedia presentation?

For production, communities may wish to consider using Animoto.com, Stupeflix.com, Windows Movie Maker, iMovie, or other user-friendly sites that offer services for free or nominal costs. You may also want to tap into the creative expertise that already exists in your community. Former applicants have enlisted the help of their local media, high school video clubs, and local businesses. Judges’ assessments of multimedia presentations will be based on thoughtfulness of content rather than production quality.
We strongly urge communities to rely on economical, user-friendly, online video-production platforms (such as those listed above) in lieu of more costly options.

How long should the multimedia presentation be?
The multimedia presentation may be up to 4 minutes (240 seconds) in length.

The videos featuring the winning communities on the RWJF website are very well done. Are these videos submitted by communities as part of their applications or are they produced for the announcement of winners?

The featured videos are produced by RWJF following winner selection; these videos were NOT submitted by applicant communities. For the multimedia presentation, communities are encouraged to make use of user-friendly and low-cost options such as are described in the above question.

Should the multimedia presentation focus on the four accomplishments from the Phase I application or should we think more broadly?

Judges will be looking to the multimedia presentations to provide a visual introduction to applicant communities, their residents and leaders, and their accomplishments. Therefore, in creating their multimedia presentations, communities are encouraged to think broadly and use the multimedia presentation as an opportunity to enhance – rather than reiterate – Phase I content.

Would it be acceptable to include interviews with elected officials or other decision-makers in the multimedia presentation?

Yes. Communities are encouraged (but absolutely not required) to include interviews with elected officials, other formal and informal decision-makers, and/or community members in the multi-media presentation.

Are past Prize winners available to provide advice or guidance to future applicants?

As ambassadors for the Prize, RWJF Culture of Health Prize winners share a desire to inspire community improvement efforts throughout the nation, a role which includes but is not limited to discussing their work at local, regional, state, and national forums. Communities are encouraged to learn about the winners through the videos and content in the Prize Gallery, rather than contacting winners directly.

May the primary or alternate contact organizations serve as the Prize recipient and receive the $25,000 award should the community win?

Yes. The primary or alternate contact organizations may also serve as the Prize recipient so long as the organization satisfies the necessary requirements (i.e., a local U.S. governmental entity, including, but not limited to, state universities, or a tax exempt entity under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code (the “Code”) and classified as other than a private foundation or Type III supporting organization under section 509 of the Code).
Finalist & Site Visit FAQs

When will the site visits take place?
Site visits for the 2016 Prize competition will take place in April, May, and June 2016.

How will site visits be scheduled?
If your community is selected as a finalist, you will be contacted by RWJF Culture of Health Prize staff, who will ask you to complete a survey (generally within three to five business days of notification) to determine which of the possible site visit dates will work for your community.

How long will site visits last?
Site visitors will be in your community for about 24 hours. The visit itself will take place over two days, typically beginning in the early afternoon of the first day and ending around noon on the second.

How many site visitors will participate?
Each RWJF Culture of Health Prize site visit team will generally have four to six (4-6) members. Site visitors will represent the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the University of Wisconsin Population Health Institute, and other national or regional experts in community health improvement.

What happens during a site visit?
The site visit is an opportunity for you to showcase your community’s accomplishments and bring life and voice to your paper application. The schedule includes:

Day One
The first day typically begins in the early afternoon with a Community Tour and concludes that evening with a Leadership Dinner. The Community Tour may be up to four hours in length, during which community members provide a first-hand introduction of the people and places that bring your community’s successes to life. In the evening, site visitors gather with up to six community leaders to talk informally about your community’s health improvement vision and journey.

Day Two
The second day starts with a Community Conversation that generally last about three hours long and during which approximately 20-25 diverse community members participate in a dialogue with site visitors. Site visits typically conclude by noon on the second day.

More specific guidance on the site visit will be available for those invited to participate in the site visit phase of the competition.
Who organizes the site visit?

The community will be asked to decide on primary and alternate points of contact for communications with RWJF Culture of Health Prize staff during the site visit phase. An initial request will be extended to the Primary Contact listed on the community’s application. These individuals will provide leadership for organizing the three elements of the site visit (Community Tour, Leadership Dinner, and Community Conversation) and will coordinate all logistics with the Prize staff.

Who pays for the site visit?

RWJF Culture of Health Prize site visit team travel expenses (including all meals), van rental (if necessary for the Community Tour) and the Leadership Dinner costs will be covered by the Prize program.

May finalist communities offer gifts to site visitors?

No. To be fair to communities we have a no gift policy. Site visitors find it helpful, though, to receive brief written materials to highlight and build upon what they see and hear during the visit.

How will we be notified if we have won the Prize?

All finalist communities will be notified by email as to whether they have won the Prize. Additional information on the timing of this notification will be provided during the site visit.

What happens if we win?

Lots! RWJF and UWPHI will work collaboratively with you to help prepare for a national event and media outreach around the announcement of the Prize winners. Here are a few of the activities you can anticipate:

- Your community will be assigned a communications liaison from the RWJF communications team. This person’s responsibility is to coordinate all communications and media activities for your community.
- A video crew will come to your community and film important elements for telling your story.
- You will work with the communications liaison to prepare media releases.
- You will identify which members of your community will attend the national RWJF Culture of Health Prize Celebration & Learning Event and RWJF will fund travel for several members of your community to attend the event.
- During the Celebration & Learning Event, community members in attendance will play a variety of roles, including accepting the Prize on the community’s behalf and, in some cases, speaking to media representatives. This event will provide excellent opportunities for learning and networking through engagement with 2013-2015 winners, RWJF and UWPHI leadership and staff, national health leaders, policymakers, funders, and invited guests.

When may we share the good news with our community?

You may share the news with your community after the national unveiling of winners. This means that your good news will be a secret (or embargoed) for a period of time. Under the terms of the embargo, you may share the news with key members of your community’s health improvement leadership team, but not to the general public or the local media. This time will be used for preparing winning communities’ videos and other communications, so these materials are ready for sharing at the time winners are officially announced.

May we have a local celebration?

Yes. Local celebrations can happen any time after the national announcement. We encourage you to capitalize on the momentum with local celebrations. We will provide a stipend to support your local celebration. At your invitation, staff from RWJF and/or UWPHI will be happy to participate in these local festivities.

What happens after the celebrations?

To raise awareness and inspire locally-driven change across the country, winning communities’ success stories will also be shared broadly in a variety of ways including a combination of:

- Video storytelling;
- Social, broadcast and print media;
- Web and online platform postings; and
- Meeting and conference presentations.

Winning communities will become part of the RWJF Culture of Health Prize alumni community and receive invitations to future Prize events and learning and sharing opportunities to support their ongoing work to improve health.

If a community is chosen as a winner, is it guaranteed to be awarded a Prize?

While the Foundation anticipates that each of the communities selected as a winner will be awarded a Prize, the Foundation reserves the right in its sole discretion to disqualify any community or, if applicable, require that the community designate an alternative organization to receive the Prize, at any time up until a Prize is formally awarded (whether before or after winners are selected or announced) if, for example, an individual or organization named in the application is under investigation for misconduct which might adversely affect the Foundation’s reputation.